Summary of Results

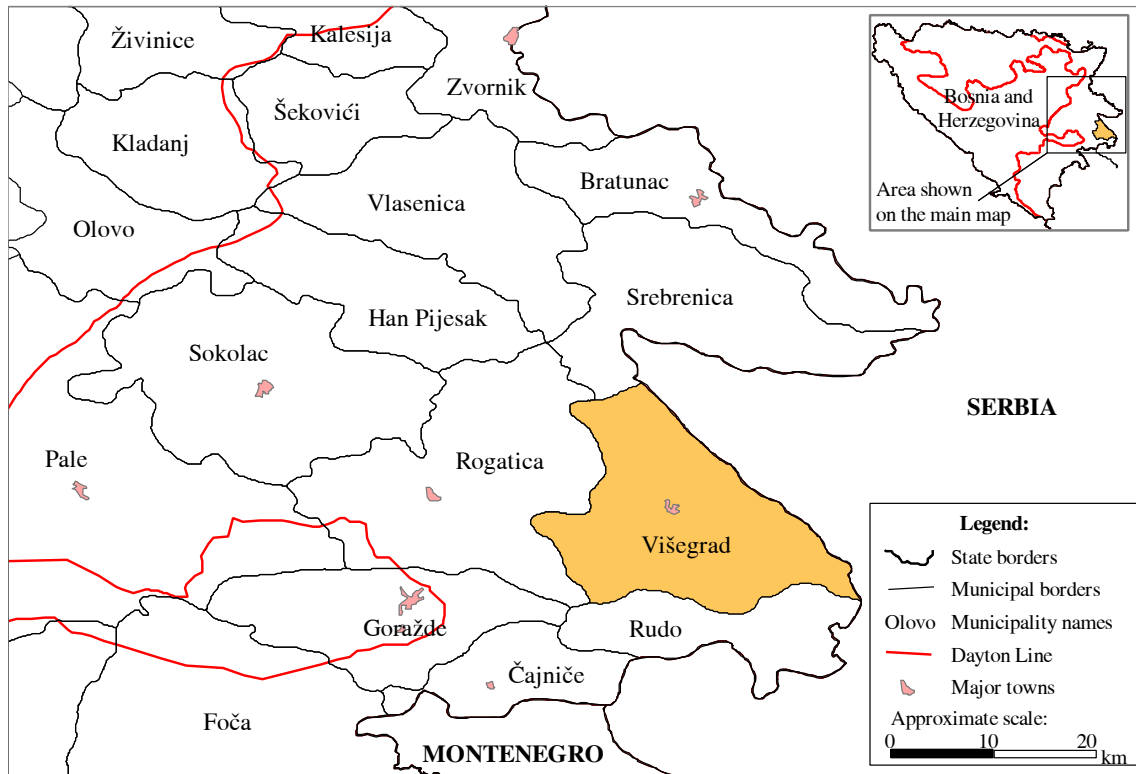

This report summarises changes from 1991 to 1997 in the ethnic composition of the Višegrad municipality in the middle-east of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Its goal is to provide reliable demographic statistics that allow for an assessment of the type and scale of the changes. Secondly, I discuss basic demographic profiles of persons who went missing in the Višegrad municipality during the war. The study of missing persons aims at showing who were those who went missing and finding, whether there were any particular periods in which people disappeared. In this report I analyse three data sources: the 1991 Population Census, the 1997 Voters Register, and the ICRC list of missing persons (the 2005 edition), and use standard statistical and demographic methods.

The major findings are the following:

- In 1991 Višegrad had two main ethnic groups: Muslims (63.5%) and Serbs (31.8%). There were also Others - mainly Yugoslavs (4.5%), and Croats (0.2%), that lived there.
- The 1991 population was however unequally distributed within Višegrad: out of the total of 159 settlements within the municipality, 93 had a clear Muslim majority, 60 a clear Serb majority and only six could be considered as “mixed”, including the Višegrad town.
- The post-war ethnic structure of Višegrad was dominated by Serbs (95.9%). During the war Muslims entirely disappeared from Višegrad. This is reflected also at the level of settlements.
- Scale of the process of changes in the ethnic composition in Višegrad was substantially larger than in other municipalities in the surroundings (excluding Srebrenica and Bratunac).
- The vast majority of persons missing in Višegrad were Muslim men, mainly aged 15 to 44 years.
- The process of going missing was most intense in May and June 1992; over a half of the missing persons disappeared in Višegrad town.
- Number of persons missing in Višegrad in 1992 was larger than in any other municipality in the surroundings. Timing of disappearances in 1992 in Višegrad is similar to the timing in the surrounding municipalities.

1. Introduction

This report summarises changes in the ethnic composition of the Višegrad municipality in the middle-east of Bosnia and Herzegovina between 1991 and 1997. Its goal is to provide reliable demographic statistics that allow for an assessment of the type and scale of the changes.

In this report I analyse three data sources: the 1991 Population Census, the 1997 Voters Register, and the ICRC list of missing persons (the mid-2005 edition). These sources are reliable and relevant to the objectives of this report. Changes in the ethnic composition are shown by comparing the 1991 Census-based statistics with statistics based on the 1997 Voters Register. The 1991 Census is the latest complete population survey conducted directly before the war and gives a very accurate perspective on the population and its ethnic composition in this period. As to the 1997 Voters Register, I realise that ideally a period closer to the early phase of the conflict should be taken for the comparison with the 1991 Census. Such sources are, however, generally unavailable and therefore cannot be analysed here. Even though the year 1997 is quite distant from the period in which the most population movements occurred, the 1997 Voters Register can be seen as a valuable source to discuss the war-related changes in the ethnic composition. Firstly, because in 1997, (as I will prove in this report), many displaced persons still lived in areas different from their place of residence in 1991. Secondly, because the returns of internally displaced persons that took place in 1996-97 were not considerable which suggests that many displaced persons resided in 1997 in temporary locations acquired during the war.

The report consists of the “Summary of Results” (included at the beginning of this report), four main sections, and three Annexes. Section 1 is a general “Introduction”. In Section 2 I discuss details of “Data Sources and Methods”, and in Section 3 I summarise “Changes in the Ethnic Composition 1991-1997”. Section 4 is devoted to “Basic Demographic Distributions of the Missing Persons in Višegrad”. Finally, the Annexes provide the reader with some additional information. Annex A contains the list of persons who went missing in the Višegrad municipality, being an excerpt from the ICRC list of missing persons. Annex B provides information about the ethnic composition of all settlements in Višegrad municipality in 1991 and of a selection of them in 1998. Annex C contains the description of statistical methodology (chi-squared goodness-of-fit test) used in the report.

One practical remark regarding the use of the Voters Register is that when the total number of the 1997 voters is broken down by place of registration, the resulting samples can be very small. In order to increase the sample size, I use the 1997 Voters Register in combination with the Register from the 1998 election, which was also supervised by the OSCE. The type of information available from the two Registers is the same. The 1998 Register is only used for those voters who registered first time in 1998. Approximately 95% of the voters registered first time in 1997 and only about 5% in 1998. Therefore, my results should be seen (and will be further referred to) as the 1997 figures.

2. Data Sources and Methods

2.1 Population Census for Bosnia and Herzegovina 1991

My source of information on the pre-war population of Višegrad is the 1991 Census for Bosnia and Herzegovina. The Census was taken in April 1991 (officially per March 31, 1991), just before the outbreak of hostilities in the former Yugoslavia.

In statistical practice, the population census is the largest and most complete source of information about the population in a country. The 1991 Population Census covered the entire population of Bosnia and Herzegovina as of 31 March 1991. During the Census, information was collected about a total of 4,4 million individuals. The information about individuals was obtained in face-to-face interviews based on a Census questionnaire designed in a uniform way for the whole country, i.e. the former Yugoslavia. Preparations for the 1991 Census started about a decade earlier and included among other things: preparing and adopting the Census Law at the country and republican levels, appointing the authority responsible for the conduct of the Census (in Bosnia it was the Republican Statistical Office in Sarajevo; the municipal Statistical Offices were the local agencies responsible for the actual Census taking), developing the Census questionnaire, issuing manuals and training of the Census inspectors and interviewers, developing procedures for duplicate elimination, error checking and corrections, designing data processing schemes, preparing and conducting a Pilot Census, and after the actual 1991 Census - a Control Census, plan of publication etc.

The electronic Census files contain one record for each enumerated person. These records include information on a large number of variables, such as the municipality and settlement of residence, name and surname, father's name, household sequential number, personal ID number, date and place of birth, sex, occupation, ethnicity, mother tongue, religion, educational attainment, the number of children born (for women only), and many more.

The overall data quality is good, except for frequent errors in the persons' names. These errors are mostly consequences of poor optical scanning of the original forms (for example misreading V for U, as in MVSIC' and no subsequent checking and editing. To correct the scanning errors the Demographic Unit - OTP employed several strategies. First, computer software was developed and applied to detect combinations of letters that are impossible in the B/C/S language. The software used the B/C/S syntax in order to assess the viability of combinations. The impossible combinations were corrected by eliminating miss-shaped (illogical) characters and inserting their most likely equivalents. Secondly, we developed correction tables to eliminate scanning mistakes from the names. The tables contained the actual names and their correct versions which both were used by a computer programme to produce suggestions regarding the corrections needed. Then, these suggestions were controlled manually to discard any wrong corrections produced by the software. The accepted corrections were then applied to the data. Native speakers of the B/C/S language, who in addition were familiar with naming traditions in Bosnia and Herzegovina, undertook all these tasks. Furthermore, we also developed and applied computer software that utilised household information to correct surnames within households. The software checked the correctness and consistency of family names within the same households. Household members, whose family name was different from the (correct) name of others in this particular household, received the correct name. For instance, if MUSIC' was the correct surname in a household, the person enumerated as part of this household under the name MVSIC' would become MUSIC'.

A second data quality problem is that for a number of records the unique 13-digit personal ID number (jedinstveni matični broj, JMB), introduced in the former Yugoslavia in 1981, is only partly available. The JMB consists of date of birth (DOB, 7 digits), region of birth (2 digits), a sex-specific sequential number (3 digits), and a check digit (1 digit). For our needs the date of birth is essential, other components of the JMB being of less value. The date of birth is missing only for a few per cent of the 1991 population; i.e. for only 4.3% of the 1991 population of Višegrad.

In my opinion, data-related problems do not discredit the 1991 Census as a powerful source of information about the pre-conflict population in Bosnia and Herzegovina.

The Census includes a variable on the ethnicity of the enumerated individuals. This allows us to study the population in the context of the 1991 ethnicity for all those individuals whose records have been linked between two data sources (e.g. the 1991 Census and ICRC list). The question on ethnicity in the Census questionnaire was open-ended meaning that individuals could declare themselves as belonging to any ethnicity. The majority of the 1991 Census population declared themselves as belonging to one of the three major ethnic groups in Bosnia and Herzegovina: Serbs, Muslims, or Croats. Other ethnic declarations in the 1991 Census included Yugoslavs (relatively frequently), combinations of ethnicities, such as “Serb-Croat” or “Muslim-Serb” (infrequently), and other national (e.g. Vlach or Gypsies) or foreign (e.g. Hungarians) ethnicities (less frequently). Those who called themselves Yugoslavs, or by names combining two ethnicities, were often children from mixed marriages. The Yugoslavs did not feel they belonged to any particular ethnic group and frequently disliked ethnic categorisation.

For this report, four ethnic groups were distinguished on the basis of ethnicity declarations in the 1991 Census: Serbs, Muslims, Croats, and Others. The last group, Others, is a residual category and covers persons who declared themselves as Yugoslavs, combinations of ethnic groups, and other national or foreign ethnic groups.

2.2 OSCE Voters Registers 1997 and 1998

The Voters’ Registers discussed in this section were established under the auspices of the OSCE; i.e. the Organization for Security and Co-operation in Europe; they are therefore often referred to as the OSCE Voters’ Registers. The basis for establishing these Registers was the 1991 Population Census that after the conflict was the latest available complete source of information about the population of Bosnia and Herzegovina, and in particular about the eligible voters. To register to vote, people had to be included in the 1991 Census, be 18 years old at the time of elections, or present other evidence that they were eligible to vote. Registration stations were established in all municipalities of BH and in many foreign countries. It was possible to register in the municipality of current residence, (i.e. residence in 1997 or 1998), that was different from the one where the person lived in before the war. At the same time, the voters could give their votes for the municipalities of their pre-war residence. The municipality of registration to vote was thus a good proxy for the actual place of living of the voters in 1997 and 1998.

The registration to vote was voluntary, which implies that the registers exclude those who did not register because they were not interested, ill, too old or too young. Still, since countrywide at least 75% of the eligible population registered for the elections, the results on IDPs and refugees presented in this report cannot be greatly weakened. The reason for this is simply that since such a large proportion of the population registered themselves, the errors which may be caused by people who did not register, are not large enough to seriously bias these results.

Because of the voluntary character of the registration, Voters' Registers cannot be used as a source on the overall population size in 1997 and 1998. In these years the population of Bosnia was certainly larger than the approximate 2,7 million voters covered in the Registers (probably around 3.5 or more million). The Registers can be, however, safely seen as a large sample of the population that survived the 1992-95 conflict in Bosnia and Herzegovina, including IDPs and refugees. Noteworthy, this population was aged 18 years or older at the time of elections; children below 18 years of age, who are not eligible to vote, are not represented in the Registers.

The 1997-98 Voters' Register is a large sample of the 1997-98 population of eligible voters of Bosnia and Herzegovina. All voters who registered to vote in 1997 and in 1998 are covered in this source. The Demographic Unit - OTP merged the two Voters' Registers (1997 and 1998) in one (1997-98). The overlap of these two lists is large. Only about 150,000 records are new in 1998 (1st registration in 1998). All other records reported in the 1998 Register are also covered in the 1997 Register. While merging the Registers, we included all records from 1997 (1st registration in 1997) and additionally the new records from 1998 (150,000 records from the 1st registration in 1998). In most cases, the 1998 records appeared to cover municipalities where the registration was less complete in 1997. The total size of the merged 1997-98 Voters' Register is 2,674,506 records and it mainly covers the year 1997.

Besides the variables such as the surname, first name, sex, date of birth, and matični broj (JMB), four location items were registered: municipality of residence in 1991, municipality (and centre) of registration to vote in 1997 (or 1998), and municipality for which the person wanted to vote in 1997 (or 1998). In the 1998 Register, also the settlement of registration is available.

The Voters Register has some of the same data quality problems as the 1991 Census, although not as many, especially misspelled names and missing or incomplete date of birth or matični broj. The deficiencies are mostly due to optical scanning of the registration forms. The matični broj was checked and found to be complete and valid for 83.7% of the 1997 voters from Višegrad. The names were checked and corrected with the computer programme and other procedures mentioned above in the section on the 1991 Census.

There have been allegations that some people registered fraudulently to vote in the 1997 elections, by using false names (i.e. names of dead people). Brunborg and Urdal (2000) investigated this thoroughly for Srebrenica and found no evidence of massive fraud in the registration of voters in 1997 and 1998. For Srebrenica only 12 persons (out of about 7,661 missing) were found both in the lists of missing persons and in the 1997 and 1998 Voters Registers.²

2.3 The ICRC List of Missing Persons for Bosnia and Herzegovina

The ICRC started the registration of missing persons from the territory of Bosnia and Herzegovina (BH) already during the 1992-1995 conflict, primarily to register persons believed to be in detention.³ The registration of the missing persons from Bosnia was one of the largest ICRC operations after the WWII. The National BH Red Cross/ Red Crescent Societies were involved in collecting tracing requests as well as and in public campaigns run in Bosnia and Herzegovina in order to increase the awareness of the society of the ICRC activities. The registration continued after the war until the present time, although recently at a much lower pace. In the year 2007, 40 additional tracing requests were registered. The work of ICRC in Bosnia and Herzegovina has so far resulted in the publication of eight editions of their list of missing persons (the 8th edition published in 2007), as well as an addendum containing about 1,000 entries (published in 2000). The latest editions of the ICRC books (starting with the 4th) contained records of still missing persons as well as known deaths.

In addition to publishing of these books, ICRC maintains a website where the names of still missing persons from Bosnia and Herzegovina are presented. The website, available at http://www.familylinks.icrc.org/mis_bos.nsf/bottin, is regularly up-dated.

ICRC used a standard questionnaire for tracing requests. Thus, the same data items were collected for all missing: names (first, father's, family), date and place of birth, date and place of disappearance, who reported etc. Each missing person received a unique identification number (the so-called BAZ number). As respondents only close relatives or eye witnesses were accepted. Data was computerized with IT specialists and is available in a database format. Data was systematically provided from Sarajevo to Geneva for further processing, cross-referencing with other sources, and including on the web. Importantly, as a result of cross-referencing, ICRC systematically excluded closed cases both dead and alive, as well as administrative exclusions.

The 2005 up-date of the ICRC list of missing persons for all of Bosnia and Herzegovina used for this report was provided directly by the Geneva Office of the ICRC on 17 August 2005 (ERN: D000-1714-D000-1714). The list sent to the OTP in August 2005 is broader than the web-based list of "still missing" only and includes some information about the body for those still missing and about persons who are not missing any more. The 2005 ICRC list provided to the OTP has five components:

- still missing with information about the body not yet available (14,105 records);
- still missing with information about the body already available (1,528);
- ICRC closed cases, i.e. confirmed deaths (6,093);
- alive persons, i.e. cases no more valid as part of the missing persons list (434);
- administrative exclusions (52).

Altogether these lists contain 22,212 records, of which 21,726 are related to still missing or dead persons and 486 are no more relevant.

³ Sources for this section include: Special Report by ICRC on "The issue of missing persons from Bosnia and Herzegovina, Croatia and the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia", Feb 1998, ERN 0349-2128-0349-2143; ICRC Annual Report 2007- downloaded from the ICRC website.

The 2005 ICRC list, as all previous editions of the list, includes data on surname, first name, father's name, sex, date and place of birth, and date and place of disappearance (reported as the "place – municipality").

It is noteworthy that even though ICRC obviously has improved their records throughout the years since the publication of their first list in 1996, empty or incomplete fields are still seen on the 2005 ICRC list. The most frequently incomplete items are date of birth (28.8 % incomplete; 6,403 incomplete DoB out of 22,212 records; but only 12 without year of birth) and date of disappearance (11.8 % incomplete; 2,624 incomplete out of all 22,212, but only one record without year of death). The other variables are recorded for almost everybody – but that does not necessarily mean that they are always correct. Errors are seen in the spelling of names of persons and places. Moreover, from comparing several lists we know that there are errors, although mostly small, in variables such as date of birth. Such errors are common all over the world in data collected through questionnaires in surveys, censuses and elsewhere. It is, therefore, not surprising that there are errors in variables concerning tragic events collected in a chaotic and traumatic situation.

In connection with a study of the number of missing persons from Srebrenica, the Demographic Unit – OTP did a thorough analysis of the quality of the 2005 ICRC list. We found that the quality of the data is generally good and reliable, although there are some deficiencies in the data, as those mentioned above.

The ICRC list is primarily a list of missing and not dead people. It is generally assumed, however, that most (if not all) of these people are dead. The ICRC itself also expressed this opinion⁴.

2.4 Methods

Our approach has been to match information about individuals from the 1991 Census with individual records from the lists of missing/dead persons and the OSCE Voters Register for the 1997 elections. When comparing various lists with data on individuals our approach has been to use the Access database program to search for records on one list that match records on the other list. If key variables are identical in two lists the matched records are assumed to represent the same person, otherwise not. This would have been a fast and easy procedure if all individuals on each list were uniquely determined by one or more variables, such as an ID number. However, this is not the case with all lists available to us. Although a unique ID number was introduced in Yugoslavia in 1981, it is not used by e.g. ICRC in their database. Moreover, when it is used, such as in the 1991 Census and the OSCE Voters Register, it is sometimes missing or inconsistent.

The matching of two lists always began by searching for records with identical names and date of birth. It is very unusual that two different persons have identical names and are born on exactly the same date, especially if we are only considering the population of a limited area, such as a single municipality. Quite often, however, names are spelled differently or the date of birth is recorded slightly differently – or missing altogether in one or both lists. Consequently, for persons not matched in the first round we made the search criteria gradually broader for one or more variables, for example by including only the year (and not the full date) of birth, or only the initial of the first name, in addition to the surname. The results of such matches have, however, to be inspected visually to decide if the matches are likely to be of the same person or not, by looking at other available information, such as municipality and place of birth or residence. For example, the place of birth may be given as a municipality on one list and a small hamlet, located in the municipality, on the other list. It would be very complicated, if possible at all, to automate such checks. For difficult cases we checked the 1991 Census for additional information, e.g. information about family members of the person in question.

To record the quality and basis for a match, a parameter (a quality indicator) was assigned to each matched person depending on the criteria used for the match. This parameter was used to study the number of accepted matches according to the type and quality of the match. We believe that the accuracy of this method is very good and that it yields reliable results.

As a result of the matching process the DU-OTP was able to identify 10,522 survivors (i.e. registered voters from 1997 and 1998)⁵ out of 21,198 individuals reported as living in Višegrad in the 1991 Population Census, i.e. 49.63%. Some changes are due to natural population movements before, during and after the war, in particular natural deaths and out-migrations. The largest group of people that we do not have any information about, are the eligible voters who did not register to vote. We also do not possess any post-war information about survivors from age 0 to 17 years. Thus, all estimates of survivors provided in this report are minimum numbers. The true figures are substantially higher.

Many analyses presented in this report are made by ethnicity, obtained from exactly the same definition for both analyzed years, for 1991, for 1997-98, and also for the moment of disappearance. The definition I applied is the one used in the questionnaire of the 1991 Population Census, where ethnicity was a self-reported response to an open-ended question. In the original census forms, the citizens of Bosnia and Herzegovina mentioned about one hundred of ethnic categories. The Demographic Unit - OTP re-grouped these categories into four major clusters: those who reported themselves as Muslims, Croats or Serbs were regarded as members of these particular groups, all remaining categories, including Yugoslavs, were taken together as Others.

With regard to the definition of internally displaced persons, the 1991 and 1997-98 municipality of residence were compared for each person studied. If an individual resided in 1991 in a different municipality than the municipality where he/she registered to vote in 1997-98 elections, then the person was considered internally displaced. Comparisons were made for post-Dayton municipalities, which involved creating a new variable, post-Dayton municipality, for all individuals reported in the Census. This task was successfully completed for the Višegrad area (including Višegrad and other municipalities studied in this report).

It needs to be noted that internal migration in former socialist countries, such as Yugoslavia and, in particular, Bosnia and Herzegovina, was limited in the years until 1991. Our analysis of differences in the place of residence before and after the conflict is therefore fully justified as a method for assessment of population movements during the 1992-95 conflict. Pre-conflict internal migration in Bosnia and Herzegovina was negligible. Moreover the usual causes of internal migration (labour market, housing, education etc.) did not operate during the conflict. Poor housing was one of the reasons for low population mobility in Bosnia and Herzegovina before 1991. Also the urbanisation process was relatively slow in Bosnia when compared with dynamic Western countries. The process was controlled by the socialist party. Labour migration did not play much role as unemployment did not exist in the socialist system. Jobs were guaranteed for everyone. Making career was related to factors largely beyond individual ambition and readiness to move for a job. These factors were related to, for example, socialist party membership or employment policies of the leading party. The working age population of the former Yugoslavia, including Bosnia, mainly men, travelled, however, to Western European countries for temporary jobs and better income, but this temporary (external, not internal) migration returned systematically back home.

Refugees were persons who in 1991 were reported in the population of Bosnia and Herzegovina (including those temporarily residing abroad) and who in 1997-98 registered to vote in countries different than Bosnia. There were approximately 300,000 out-of-country voters from Bosnia and Herzegovina who satisfied this criterion.

Note that our definitions of internally displaced persons and refugees are statistical, not legal. As such the numbers of IDPs and refugees presented in this report should be seen as approximations of the actual true figures. Note also that obtaining the true figures is in our view an impossible task due to limited existing sources of information and fragmentary information contained in these sources.

3. Changes in the Ethnic Composition in the Višegrad Region, 1991-1997

3.1 Višegrad Municipality, 1991-97

In this section I discuss changes in the ethnic composition in the Višegrad municipality by comparing the 1991 structure with the structure for 1997. In addition, a comparison between ethnic structures of selected settlements (i.e. administrative sub-units within the municipality) in the years 1991 and 1998 is provided. At the end of this discussion I place the changes that occurred in Višegrad in the context of similar changes in surrounding municipalities.

Before the war the population of Višegrad increased systematically from about 18,923 in 1948 to 21,199 in 1991 (Table 1). The municipality was relatively thinly populated in 1991 (47.3 persons per 1 sq.km), much of the population lived in the town of Višegrad. In 1991, as in 1981, the majority ethnic group was the Muslims (63.5% in 1991 and 62.1% in 1981). Serbs were the second largest group; their share was 33% and 31.8% in 1981 and 1991 respectively (Table 2).

Table 2 also shows the ethnic composition of Višegrad in 1997. The figures for 1997 do not entirely correspond to those for 1981 and 1991. For 1997 only the population at age 18 years or more is included, i.e. the eligible voters, while for 1981 and 1991 all age groups are shown. Moreover, the 1997 voters represent a sample of the whole population, while the 1981 and 1991 figures cover all citizens living in this area. Despite these deficiencies, the 1997 figures give a good impression of the ethnic structure in 1997. As we can see from Table 2, for Višegrad as a municipality, the pre-war majority group, Muslims, were entirely gone in 1997. The proportion of Serbs was substantially higher in 1997 than in 1991, whereas the remaining shares of Croats and Others stayed at similar levels as before the war. The Serbs became not only the dominant ethnic group in Višegrad, but also almost exclusively the only group remaining in this municipality.

In order to produce a more accurate picture of changes in the ethnic composition it is necessary to analyse the population at age 18 or more years for both considered years. This is reported below.

The 1991 population of Višegrad was estimated at 21,199 individuals (Table 2), out of which 17,883 were at age 18 or more years in 1997 (Table 3a) and were eligible to vote. The eligible voters are the subjects of all analyses following in the next sections of this report.

The population of Višegrad was in 1991 dominated by Muslims (about 62.5%; Figure 1a and Table 3a). The 1997 ethnic composition of the Višegrad population, as estimated from our sample of 9,241 registered voters, was completely different than the 1991 composition, i.e. it became dominated by Serbs in 95.9 per cent. Figure 1b and Table 3b further confirm that practically all Muslim voters who lived in Višegrad in 1991, registered to vote in 1997 in other municipalities in Bosnia and Herzegovina or abroad (some 6,798 or almost all out of the 6,799 registered). On the contrary to Muslims, Serbs from Višegrad registered mainly in the Višegrad municipality (3,704 or 96.9% out of 3,822 registered) in 1997.

Croats were weakly represented among the 1997 voters, which may indicate that this group was largely absent in the area of Višegrad in 1997. Also Others were not numerous. Some 63% of Others registered to vote in 1997 outside the borders of the Višegrad municipality (22% in other municipalities in BH and 41% abroad).

The largest group of the internally displaced population from the Višegrad municipality were the Muslims. There were in total 4,717 registered voters whom I identified as registered in municipalities different than Višegrad. The 1997 place of registration of the displaced Muslim population is shown in Figure 1c.

The Muslim population moved to areas located in the Federation of Bosnia and Herzegovina. Many Muslims fled to the Federal part of the Goražde municipality, and to the Federal parts of Sarajevo (Centar, Stari Grad, Novi Grad, Novo Sarajevo, Ilidža, Ilijaš, Hadžići, Vogošća) and surrounding municipalities such as Visoko, Kakanj, and Zenica.

Our results shown on the map above are very much in accordance with the distribution of displaced persons reported in 1998 by the UNHCR in Sarajevo (Table 4).

Table 5 summarises the emigration (i.e. out-migration) from the municipality of Višegrad. It is striking that out of 2,255 persons who left the municipality and in 1997 still lived in locations different from their pre-war place of residence which in addition were outside the borders of Bosnia and Herzegovina, the largest group (some 2,081) were Muslims. About 2,061 (99%) of all Muslim migrants went obviously to countries outside of the area of the former Yugoslavia.

The remaining out-migration from Višegrad was of Serbs and Others (84 and 87 individuals respectively). Some 87% of the Serbs moved to FRY (practically to Serbia) and 83% of Others moved to countries outside the former Yugoslavia.

3.2 Changes in the Ethnic Composition in Selected Settlements in Višegrad, 1991-1998

In 1991 there were 159 settlements (administrative sub-units) in the Višegrad municipality. Most of them (93) had a clear Muslim majority (well above 50% Muslims), whereas 60 had a clear Serb majority. Only six settlements could be considered as “mixed”, i.e. having the difference between the shares of two major ethnic groups less than 15%. These settlements include Višegrad town and the villages: Koritnik, Pijavice (with hamlet Uzamnice), Prelovo, Sase and Velji Lug (with hamlets Krčevine, Omar, Šipovac and Žilići).

The detailed list of all settlements in Višegrad with their ethnic composition in 1991, as reported in the Population Census, is attached in Annex B. The Annex also includes the estimated ethnic composition of selected settlements in 1998, based on the 1998 Voters Register (only for 1998 the information about voters' settlements is provided). Note however, that as the Voters Register is only a sample of the post-war population, only those settlements are shown, for which the sample size is large enough, i.e. the number of observations exceeds 50. This condition is met for 15 settlements (Višegrad town and some larger villages, the full list is provided in Annex B). From this example it can be clearly seen that during the period 1991-1998 all of them became almost exclusively Serb, regardless their pre-war ethnic composition.

3.3 Selected Municipalities in the Višegrad Region, 1991-97

The objective of the analysis presented in this subsection is to compare the changes of the ethnic composition in Višegrad with the changes that occurred in the surrounding municipalities. The municipalities selected to study all entirely belong to Republika Srpska since 1995. These municipalities are: Bratunac, Čajniče, Han Pijesak, Milići, Rogatica, Rudo, Sokolac, Srebrenica and Vlasenica. Goražde municipality which was split by the Dayton line and since 1995 consists of two parts (Goražde-FBH and Srpsko Goražde-RS), has been excluded from this study. I excluded Goražde for the reason that in all split municipalities extremely large population movements occurred between the Serb and Federal areas. Such extreme changes are not directly comparable with the changes that occurred in non-split municipalities. It is also worth noting that Han Pijesak, Milići, (part of) Rogatica, Sokolac and Vlasenica belonged to the so-called Serbian Autonomous District of Romanija-Birać, whereas Čajniče and Rudo – to the Serbian Autonomous District of Herzegovina (as defined by the Assembly of Serbian People in BH on 21.11.1991). However, the municipalities with a considerable Muslim majority (Srebrenica, Vlasenica, Višegrad and part of Rogatica) were not assigned to any of the Serbian Autonomous Districts.

To measure the size of changes in the ethnic composition in the mentioned municipalities and to arrange the municipalities in a rank order, a statistical measure called the χ^2 statistic (chi-square) was used. The interpretation of this measure is straightforward: the bigger the value of χ^2 , the more dramatic changes in the ethnic composition occurred. On the basis of the calculated χ^2 , a statistical test can be performed, indicating whether the obtained results show the true (significant) pattern or could they have been obtained by chance. The values of the χ^2 statistic showing the rank order of municipalities around Višegrad in terms of the size of ethnic changes are presented in Table 6. The statistical methodology underlying all the calculations and inference is described in Annex C.

It can be seen that the most dramatic changes occurred in Srebrenica, Bratunac and Višegrad. Taking into consideration that in Srebrenica and Bratunac the changes are mainly related to a single event – the fall of Srebrenica enclave in July 1995 (see also Section 4.2), it appears that Višegrad experienced the most dramatic changes in ethnic composition among the municipalities in the region. Moreover, the tests for all the municipalities proved that all changes are statistically significant, with the probability of obtaining such results by chance being practically equal 0. Summing up, changes in the ethnic composition in Višegrad reflect the pattern observed overall in the whole region, which became almost entirely Serb after the war. Finally, the intensity of these changes in Višegrad is substantially higher than of those in the surrounding municipalities (except Srebrenica and Bratunac).

4. Basic Demographic Distributions of the Missing Persons in Višegrad

4.1 Višegrad Municipality

In the ICRC list of missing persons (2005 release) I have found 705 individuals who disappeared in the Višegrad municipality. Of these persons, 560 have been identified in the 1991 Population Census (79.4%).⁶ For the persons, whose identity was confirmed by linking with the respective Census records, I could provide basic demographic distributions such as the distribution by sex, time and place of disappearance and ethnicity. Of the persons identified, 542 declared themselves in 1991 as Muslims (96.8%) and 18 as Others – Yugoslavs, other ethnicities and undeclared (3.2%). The basic demographic distributions are shown below in Figures 2 through 4 and in Tables 7 and 8. The complete list of persons missing in Višegrad municipality, being an excerpt from the 2005 ICRC list, is attached in Annex A.

From Figure 2 and Table 7 it can be seen that the vast majority of persons missing in Višegrad were Muslim men, mainly aged 15 to 44 years (younger military age). Figures 3 and 4 show that the process of going missing was most intense in May and June 1992, especially around May 25th, June 14th and June 20th 1992. Moreover, from Figure 3 it can be clearly seen that the disappearances of persons in Višegrad took place almost exclusively in late spring and early summer 1992. Table 8 shows that from all the places where people went missing in the municipality, most important was the town of Višegrad, where 396 persons disappeared (56%).

4.2 Selected Municipalities in the Višegrad Region

The aim of the review presented in this subsection is to compare the number of persons missing in Višegrad with the numbers of persons who disappeared in the surrounding municipalities. The list of municipalities taken into account is the same as in the analysis presented in Section 3.3. For all these municipalities (including Višegrad) I have found that 9,719 individuals have been reported to the ICRC as missing during the war. Of these persons, 83.8% have been identified in the 1991 Population Census, out of those 98.1% had declared themselves in 1991 as Muslims. The detailed figures by municipality are presented in Table 9.

To eliminate the bias caused by uneven timing of the incidents in the municipalities around Višegrad (especially related to the fall of Srebrenica enclave in July 1995, what is reflected by the figures for Srebrenica and Bratunac), the totals from Table 9 are further broken down by the year of disappearance as shown in Table 10.

In 1992, out of the ten selected municipalities, most missing persons disappeared in Višegrad (684). The figures for 1992 are further shown on monthly basis in Table 11.

From this table it can be seen that most disappearances in and around Višegrad occurred in late spring and early summer of 1992. In particular, the process of going missing was most intense in May and June 1992 – together 62.2% of all missing in 1992 disappeared during these two months. Timing of disappearances in 1992 in Višegrad is similar to the timing in the surrounding municipalities, which indicates that the events in Višegrad could have been a part of larger-scale processes which occurred in the whole area in late spring and early summer of 1992.

Note. To ensure the reliability of the sample, only settlements with 50 or more registered voters are shown.
Nevertheless, voters from these settlements constitute about 85% of all registered in Višegrad in 1998.

ANNEX C

Chi-squared Measure of Ethnic Changes and the Goodness-of-Fit Test:

Methodology

The methodology used in this report to verify the significance of the changes in the ethnic composition in selected municipalities in BH is known in statistics as the χ^2 (chi-squared) goodness-of-fit test. This test is a well-established non-parametric statistical method giving the probability that the observed frequencies could have been sampled from a population with the given expected values. In our case, the hypothesis of ethnic distributions in 1997 (observed frequencies) remaining the same as in 1991 (expected frequencies) is verified using the following χ^2 statistic, which is calculated as follows:

$$\chi^2 = \frac{(Serbs_{97} - Serbs_{91})^2}{Serbs_{91}} + \frac{(Muslims_{97} - Muslims_{91})^2}{Muslims_{91}} + \frac{(Croats_{97} - Croats_{91})^2}{Croats_{91}} + \frac{(Others_{97} - Others_{91})^2}{Others_{91}}.$$

$Serbs_{97}$, $Muslims_{97}$, $Croats_{97}$ and $Others_{97}$ denote here the observed numbers of voters from respective ethnic groups found in the 1997 Register in a given municipality, whereas $Serbs_{91}$, $Muslims_{91}$, $Croats_{91}$ and $Others_{91}$ denote the expected numbers of voters from a given municipality. These expected numbers of voters from respective ethnic groups have been calculated providing that the total number of voters would be distributed among ethnic groups following the ethnic distribution from 1991. Note that the Voters Register is only a sample of the post-war population and therefore a more detailed statistical inference is required to compare the pre- and post-war ethnic structures than just comparing the percentages. This is described below.

The χ^2 statistic calculated in this way can be itself interpreted as a measure of the degree of ethnic changes: the bigger the value of χ^2 , the more dramatic changes in the ethnic composition have been observed. Assuming that the observed numbers of voters (being a sample from the post-war population) follow a normal distribution, this statistic follows a χ^2 distribution with $k - 1 = 3$ degrees of freedom, where $k = 4$ denotes the number of classes, i.e. ethnic groups. This feature can be used for testing purposes, i.e. to indicate whether obtained results prove that the structure really (significantly) changed or is such result obtained only by chance. Small values of χ^2 indicate no significant differences in the ethnic structure, whereas large values of χ^2 show that with big probability the changes observed show a real pattern of changes.

Generally, probability that a random variable following χ^2 distribution would get a value greater than the value of the statistic obtained from the sample (so-called probability level), indicates the probability of erroneously rejecting the hypothesis of no changes in the ethnic distribution. This probability of error is therefore a declining function of the χ^2 statistic. Thus, the greater the value of χ^2 calculated from a sample, the smaller probability of wrong inference, i.e. rejecting the hypothesis of no changes in favour of the hypothesis of significant changes, while there are no real changes in ethnic structure and the result is obtained solely by chance.
